Directly in the middle of the country and in the heart of the Namibian mountains, Windhoek is a delicate mix of modernity and cultural diversity. The convergence of large highways and railways make it an important commercial center for its average size.

The city in fact resembles nothing of the wild nature you will find in the rest of the country, notably its German aesthetic and colonial architecture. Take the time to make a stop in the historical city center, where you will find pedestrian walkways in between modern and colonial buildings. Discover one of its most famous buildings, the Christuskirche, a Lutheran church mixing neogothic and art nouveau design, constructed between 1907 and 1910.

Windhoek is a great starting point to explore Namibia's natural treasures such as the Northern Etosha National Park, the Western Namibian Desert, and the Fish River Canyon in the south.
