Malaga is situated at the extreme south of the Iberian Peninsula and enjoys a particularly mild climate. First a Roman colony then an Arab one, Malaga is a cheerful and lively city. It has a significant natural heritage with the mouth of the Guadalhorce allowing passage to many migratory animal species. It is also rich in historical and architectural sites, such as the Roman Theatre, the cathedral, Alcazaba and many churches and palaces. Malaga also has a varied cuisine and very pleasant beaches. The Costa del Sol region has beautiful scenery and beaches and a cultural and traditional heritage to learn about along the coast and in the charming, whitewashed villages inland.
